

Program Description

Columbia's Leadership and Business program is designed to call, form and equip transformational servant leaders. This program combines the complementary soft-skills of leadership, with the hard-skills of administration and business analysis, all embedded within a biblically-rooted, practical theology core. Graduates will be equipped to serve in non-profit leadership roles, as managers within the marketplace, or to pursue further education.

Program Objectives

1. Students will discover, assess, and develop their leadership and management potential.
2. Students will learn to strategically apply various best practices which aid in personal and organizational sustainability.
3. Students will learn to practically integrate biblical theology with leadership and business best practices.
4. Students will practice leading a team towards a common vision while shaping culture, empowering employees/volunteers, and communicating effectively.
5. Students will create organizational and business plans that provide strategic clarity, faithfully steward people and resources, and lead to productive outcomes.
